LONDON DRAMA SCHOOL GRADUATING COMPANY SELLS OUT ENTIRE RUN AT CZECH FESTIVAL

Fragility Theatre Company returned to London yesterday after playing to packed audiences on the opening weekend of Prague Fringe 2012.

The company presented a one-man show at the Beseda Galerie in Malostranska called "My First Ten Sexual Failures and Other Stories About Growing Up". Described as "Stories about the stupid things that boys and girls do to boys and girl," the show is an authorial theatre piece that develops every time it is performed. It was performed by Andrew Tomazic and directed by James Grice.

The company was the first show of the season coining them the catchphrase 'show to lose your festival virginity with.'

From the first performance, Prague Fringe released additional standing tickets to cope with the swell of people desperate to see the show. On Sunday night the festival added more seats into the venue to deal with the demand.

Czech and international media and reviewers responded openly to the performance with a plethora of positive reviews.

"There is painful realism to his performance that is, perhaps intentionally, somewhat heartbreaking." * - The New Current

"Tomazic, who has not yet completed drama school, has put together a show that, on balance, is entertaining enough to merit the 150 CZK ticket price." - Expats.cz

"The jokes are funny and Andy has a natural sense of timing and delivery. There was plenty of laughter, some of it of a nervous character, especially when he started taking off his clothes, creating a sense of 'how far is this guy prepared to go...?' Recommended show - Fringe Review.

The company now wants to take the show into London in the hope that more people can see the first public performance from this graduating company. Additionally, the company looks set to tour the UK in mid to late 2012 with their other show, "In Conversation".

Fragility Theatre Company was founded whilst Andrew Tomazic and James Grice were training at Rose Bruford from 2009-12. The pair are set to complete degrees in BA (Hons.) European Theatre Arts in June 2012.
