BRINGING SOMETHING BACK TO FAREHAM

*Fragility Theatre Company Presents:
"In Conversation"
Ashcroft Arts Centre, 7th November 2012
7:30*

What has it been like to grow up in the noughties? From sexuality to peer pressure, families and the value of relationships – all are affected by the world we grow up in.

And having one half of the company grow up in Fareham, Fragility is bringing work back to their hometowns for "One Night Only" shows.

Fragility is founded by Andrew Silverwood, of Fareham, and James Grice, of Sutton, and blends physical and contemporary theatre with biographical stories and authorial performance to create a unique blend of work. The pair met whilst studying on the European Theatre Arts Course at Rose Bruford College of theatre and performance in Sidcup.

Company Co Director, Andrew Silverwood, grew up in Fareham and attended Brookfield Community School before going to South Downs College to Study Musical Theatre.

At South Downs, he first met Chris Bartholomew, an ex Portsmouth Grammar School student who went on to study Electronic Music at Guildhall School of Music.

In 2012, Silverwood approached Bartholomew and asked him to underscore "In Conversation". Bartholomew went on to score Fragility's Prague Fringe sell-out show "My First Ten Sexual Failures and Other Stories About Growing Up".

Of "In Conversation", Silverwood says;

"We really wanted to produce some work that we could bring into the places, and to the people, who inspired us most and helped us grow.

Fareham is my hometown, and In Conversation deals with things I dealt with when I lived in Fareham. It was so important that we took the work here."

In Conversation is at the Ashcroft Arts Centre for one night only.
